Advanced Research Ethics is a full-day program devoted to an in-depth exploration of selected topics in human subjects research. The course will synthesize available empirical data with innovative conceptual analysis to provide comprehensive and penetrating perspectives on controversial issues. This course will reiterate basic knowledge, while helping IRB members, administrators, researchers, and research staff address the more challenging aspects of human subjects research. This course will reiterate basic knowledge, while helping IRB members, administrators, researchers, and research staff address the more challenging aspects of human subjects research. Topics to be addressed include placebo use; emergency research; and coercion, undue inducement, and payment. The program is based on courses offered at the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and in many developing countries, and will be taught by current and former members of the NIH Department of Bioethics.
