AAALAC identifies occupational health and safety deficiencies

Data compiled during seven years of AAALAC site visits point to areas where institutions fall short of achieving recommended standards for occupational health and safety. These deficiencies were examined in an April 2001 article in Lab Animal magazine (Volume 30, No. 4), “Elements of an Occupational Health and Safety Program: Deficiencies Identified by AAALAC International.” The article was authored by AAALAC Council members David DeLong, D.V.M., M.S., and Lauretta W. Gerrity, D.V.M., and AAALAC Associate Director Kathryn A. Bayne, M.S., Ph.D., D.V.M.

Contact AAALAC at accredit@aaalac.org to request a copy or download a related slide presentation series at www.aaalac.org (click on “Download an AAALAC presentation on occupational health and safety”).
